

POSITION ANNOUNCEMENT: Mid-Level Litigation Attorney

Position Title:	Mid-Level Litigation Attorney
Office Location:	Washington, D.C.
Department:	Federal Regulatory Practice Group

Feldesman Tucker Leifer Fidell LLP, a boutique litigation and regulatory firm in Washington D.C. with a growing national federal regulatory practice, seeks a mid-level litigation attorney who is interested in direct client contact, a greater leadership role in cases, a collegial atmosphere, and mission-driven work.

The Firm offers a specialized practice—which provides general litigators with a unique forum to develop expertise. FTLF primarily represents community organizations including federally-supported health centers, Ryan White clinics, Head Start programs, and similar entities in federal court and before administrative agencies on a wide range of issues arising from both the receipt of federal funds through grants, contracts, Medicare and Medicaid, and the special terms and conditions associated with the many federal grant programs.

Much of the Firm’s work involves disputes with State and Federal agencies, both defending matters such as Office of Inspector General audits and investigations, and any resulting actions from a cost disallowance to an action under the Civil False Claims Act. The ideal candidate for this role will have extensive litigation experience, for example, research and writing, experience with depositions, document production and other discovery matters. While litigation-centered, this role also involves administrative appeals, investigations, audits and advising on other types of disputes. The right candidate for this role would benefit from a background in litigating against (or for) the government and should be smart, energetic, self-sufficient, and looking for challenges.

A background in healthcare litigation is helpful, but not necessary.
